Some medical student, whose ignorance of grammar and incoherence of idea recommend him strongly to a safe place in the pickling vat, has rushed into pilut madly, stupidly and clumsily concerning a rumor published in the APPRAL that Hollywood had possibly fallen into the hands of the medical students. The record of medical colleges elsewhere is not such as to render them above suspicion of hawking upon a body when the opportunity offers. In some cities it is done systematically. The Memphis College is possibly too young to be initiated in the ways that are dark. The body of the father of General Ben Harrison, of Indiana, a few years ago was found to have been taken from the grave by some medical ghouls, and other instances are numerous. A medical student himself, by his mysterious hints, put color to the suspicion that Hollywood's body was in the dissecting room. The young man, who so belitties the sacred name of faculapins by assuming it, goes into print, let him be careful of his grammar, his facts, and above all his temper.
